Segue

Winter 2011 - 2012

Transitioning from who we are to who we were created to be

Segue is a culture of people who don't fit in the traditional church model yet follow the teachings of Jesus. By definition, a culture is: the knowledge, values, attitudes, and behaviors that are characteristic of a particular social group or community.

We could use a few minutes of your time to help us win $10,000.00!

Deep Ellum is in a national, online vote-off to win $10,000, which would go to the Deep Ellum Urban Gardens (artist rendering pictured above).

The short story is that Lindsey Cook is a Dallasite who entered the national Aetna Food Fight Contest and is one of four NATIONAL finalists (because of her quinoa-stuffed pepper recipe). Check it out here.

The Finalist who receives the most online votes, among other prizes, gets to send $10,000 to their favorite cause, and Lindsey chose the Deep Ellum Urban Gardens. Voting ends December 2. It looks like two of the other three competitors have teamed up on the sly, so we are really up against the odds here. Anyone can register and vote once a day until December 2, when the winner is announced in New York by

Please pray

- that our actions would consistently reflect Jesus' principles
- that we will find like minded people to support, encourage, and resource Segue
- for a strengthened commitment to community

We think this is a great story on several levels. Lindsey has made it all the way to the finals with her recipe and to our great appreciation, chose the Deep Ellum Urban Gardens for her charity. The Deep Ellum Urban Gardens Project is a grass-roots effort to create a true urban garden in the shadows of downtown Dallas. If Lindsey wins the online vote, it would put us at our fundraising budget and make the Deep Ellum Urban Gardens happen.

Kelly Clemons is leading the Urban Gardens Project. For more information email her at kelly@deepellumtexas.com.

Thanks for voting!

Raise the Arts

In Deep Ellum spirit we are collecting Art and Music supplies to donate to CITY PARK ELEMENTARY for our Christmas Drive! Jana Spurgin is heavily involved in this effort so if you have questions you can email her at Jana.Spurgin@yahoo.com. You can also get more details here.

Sophia

Zac and Jackie Garver have a new little one . . . Sophia! She's a beautiful girl and with some amazing parents.
